About The Event:

The role of women in business is constantly increasing. It is not a trend; it is now a reality! The recognition of the strategic importance of women as partners for the development of economies has led to more and more women holding leading private and public roles.

Furthermore, research has also demonstrated a strong relationship between gender diversity, good corporate governance and high corporate performance.

In the Middle East, women are also coming into their own. Increasingly, they are finding their way up the managerial ladder and the number of women across the workforce has grown at an enormous rate over the past 40 years.

However, women are still dramatically under-represented at senior levels of management.

Five FTSE 100 companies appointed their first ever woman director and thirteen FTSE 100 companies now have female executive directors, up from only 11 in 2005, but still indicating a major under-development of female talent after more than three decades of mandatory equal opportunities policies.

But how do you reach the top – and stay there?

Interviews with women directors reveal how they accessed their positions. They emphasise the importance of having a professional background, commercial experience and knowledge of corporate governance. All the women achieved their first NED positions through their own business networks.

IIR is proud to present Women In Business. This exciting event has been designed to celebrate the success stories, discuss the challenges and share the strategies of women business leaders from around the world!

As a delegate you will be able to put your questions to the experts, participate in the interactive workshops and put your personal experience and view across during the discussion and Q&A sessions.

This conference is a unique learning and networking opportunity that will provide you with the necessary skills to take your career to the next level!
